William Louden House
Lexington Park
Private

1902

The William Louden House is significant as one of the very few original farmsteads still extant within the heavily developed area of Lexington Park. The modest dwelling and its lush setting has changed little over the years. Built by local carpenter William Louden in 1902, this house continues to be owned by the Louden family.

William J. Louden and his wife Margaret D. were married on February 1, 1899. In July of 1902, she purchased 20 3/10 acres of "Mill Swamp" and 2 acres of "Part of Sarah's Retreat." William Louden, a carpenter by trade, built his family's home on this tract. Mr. Louden also grew tobacco on the property and kept cows, hogs, chickens, ducks, and turkeys here. In addition to the outbuildings currently standing on the property, the lot was formerly occupied by a corn house and a meat house.

During the 1940s, when Lexington Park began to grow as a result of the Patuxent Naval Air Station, Margaret Louden was pressured by out-of-town developers to sell her property. She was told that if she didn't sell her home to them, the government would surely condemn the land and take it from her. Widowed by this time and ill, Margaret Louden still refused to sell. It is largely due to her determination to preserve the Louden homestead, that this lot remains one of the few undeveloped tracts in the densely built Lexington Park area.

The William Louden House is located off of Great Mills Road in the Patuxent Park neighborhood of Lexington Park. The house is located at the end of a dirt road in a slight valley and is not visible from the public way. It is surrounded by an open, grassy lawn and decorative plantings. In addition to the house, a garage, two barns, a carpentry workshop, and garden shed are located on the property. The house faces south with the roof oriented on an east/west axis.

Built in 1902 by William Louden, the main block of the Louden House is a two-story, four-bay, frame structure. A one-story kitchen wing is attached to the north side of the house. This is not the original kitchen wing, but was built to replace the earlier kitchen at a later date. The house is supported by a cement block foundation. The weatherboard siding that once sheathed the structure has been replaced by artificial shingle material. The roof is covered with asphalt shingles. The original six-over-six sash windows have been replaced throughout the house by one-over-one sash windows

The south (main) elevation consists of two two-over-two sash windows as the outer-most bays. The two inner bays are entrance doors. A shed roof porch extends across the full width of the first floor. The porch, now enclosed, has a wainscoted ceiling. The second floor is pierced by four two-over-two sash windows.

The west elevation is pierced by one two-over-two sash window on both the first and second floors. An interior brick chimney pierces the roof ridgeline at this gable end. A one-story kitchen addition extends to the north of the house. On the west side of the kitchen is an enclosed porch. A two-over-two sash window and a door open from the kitchen onto the porch addition.

The first floor of the north elevation is obscured by the one-story, shed roof kitchen addition. The kitchen wing is pierced by two two-over-two sash windows, one six-over-six sash window, and one four-over-four sash window. An interior chimney projects from the roof of the kitchen wing. The second floor of the main block is blind.

The east elevation of the kitchen is pierced by one two-over-two sash window. The gable end of the main block is pierced by one two-over-two sash window on both the first and second floors. An interior brick chimney pierces the roof ridgeline. A small shed roof addition on the first floor of the main block houses the furnace.

The interior of the house consists of two parlors on the first floor and a central enclosed stair that leads to the second floor. The east parlor is more private, providin
